

Community Connecting

Helping people to be a part of where they live

Community Connecting is about helping people with learning disabilities to take part in the things going on where they live.

We think that being a part of their own communities can help people with learning disabilities live better and happier lives.

Being able to use local services like sports centres or clubs means people with learning disabilities can make new friends, and take part in things they like.

We hope that over time, people with learning disabilities will not need as much paid support to take part in their communities as they will have friends and other people in their lives who can support them.

We have written some information to help services get better at helping people with learning disabilities to be a part of where they live.

We sometimes run training sessions to show services how they can help people with learning disabilities to be part of their local area.

For more information please get in touch with:
Molly Mattingly
mmattingly@learningdisabilities.org.uk